Course period in Japan: From November 7 to December 8, 2018

This information pertains to one of the JICA Knowledge Co-Creation Program (Group & Region Focus) of the Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA), which shall be implemented as part of the Official Development Assistance of the Government of Japan based on bilateral agreement between both Governments.

‘JICA Knowledge Co-Creation Program (KCCP)’ as a New Start

In the Development Cooperation Charter which was released from the Japanese Cabinet on February 2015, it is clearly pointed out that “In its development cooperation, Japan has maintained the spirit of jointly creating things that suit partner countries while respecting ownership, intentions and intrinsic characteristics of the country concerned based on a field-oriented approach through dialogue and collaboration. It has also maintained the approach of building reciprocal relationships with developing countries in which both sides learn from each other and grow and develop together.” We believe that this ‘Knowledge Co-Creation Program’ will serve as a center of mutual learning process.

I. Concept

Background

Aichi Biodiversity Targets were adopted at the Tenth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity (COP10) held in Nagoya, Japan in October 2010. Target 11 aims to expand the Protected Area in the world, and it aims that at least 10 per cent of coastal and marine areas are conserved through effectively and equitably managed by 2020. Moreover, some Oceania countries and Guam has declared “The Micronesia Challenge” that aims similar but stricter target.

Loss of biodiversity has been especially large in marine and coastal ecosystems in Japan. Development Activities during the period of high economic growth in particular caused the massive shrinkage of natural coastline, mud flats, etc. Now, development pressures have been reduced, but there are still worries over lasting effects. There are also new concerns about invasion by alien species and the effects of climate change. On March, 2011, Japan's Ministry of the Environment (MOE) has formulated the Marine Biodiversity Conservation Strategy which shows the basic visions and the direction of measures aimed at conservation and sustainable use of marine biodiversity.

In developing countries, the destruction of ecosystem of coastal area and degradation of the living environment are serious problems in recent years caused by the influence of expansion of water and sea pollution, tourism development, an excess and an illegal fishing, a natural disaster, a climate change, etc. accompanying poverty and economic growth. Some of developing countries have worked on the conservation of coastal ecosystems through introduction of the environmental tax or participation of international initiative for coral reef conservation such as the International Coral Reef Initiative (ICRI). However, in many developing countries, the structure for reconciling the conservation of coastal ecosystem with sustainable local development is not improved. From now on, also in order to contribute to the achievement of the Aichi target, it is necessary to expand the cooperation in coastal ecosystem conservation of developing countries.

By providing knowledge and sharing experiences about the coastal ecosystem conservation in Japan and developing countries, as well as sharing information about current situations, this program aims to contribute to improvement of coastal environment in developing countries through effective management and sustainable use of natural resources.

For what?

The Program aims to develop human resources for the sustainability of coastal ecosystems.

For whom?

The Program is offered to the persons who are involved in management or conservation of coastal and marine ecosystems in governmental organization.

How?

The Program consists of lectures, practices, observations from various viewpoints necessary for coastal ecosystem management.

JICA and Capacity Development

The key concept underpinning JICA operations since its establishment in 1974 has been the conviction that “capacity development” is central to the socioeconomic development of any country, regardless of the specific operational scheme one may be undertaking, i.e. expert assignments, development projects, development study projects, training programs, JOCV programs, etc.

Within this wide range of programs, Training Programs have long occupied an important place in JICA operations. Conducted in Japan, they provide partner countries with opportunities to acquire practical knowledge accumulated in Japanese society. Participants dispatched by partner countries might find useful knowledge and re-create their own knowledge for enhancement of their own capacity or that of the organization and society to which they belong.

Pre-organized programs cover a wide range of professional fields, ranging from education, health, infrastructure, energy, trade and finance, to agriculture, rural development, gender mainstreaming, and environmental protection. A variety of programs are being customized to address the specific needs of different target organizations, such as policy-making organizations, service provision organizations, as well as research and academic institutions. Some programs are organized to target a certain group of countries with similar developmental challenges.

Japanese Development Experience

Japan was the first non-Western country to successfully modernize its society and industrialize its economy. At the core of this process, which started more than 140 years ago, was the “adopt and adapt” concept by which a wide range of appropriate skills and knowledge have been imported from developed countries; these skills and knowledge have been adapted and/or improved using local skills, knowledge and initiatives. They finally became internalized in Japanese society to suit its local needs and conditions.

From engineering technology to production management methods, most of the know-how that has enabled Japan to become what it is today has emanated from this “adoption and adaptation” process, which, of course, has been accompanied by countless failures and errors behind the success stories. We presume that such experiences, both successful and unsuccessful, will be useful to our partners who are trying to address the challenges currently faced by developing countries.

However, it is rather challenging to share with our partners this whole body of Japan’s developmental experience. This difficulty has to do, in part, with the challenge of explaining a body of “tacit knowledge,” a type of knowledge that cannot fully be expressed in words or numbers. Adding to this difficulty are the social and cultural systems of Japan that vastly differ from those of other Western industrialized countries, and hence still remain unfamiliar to many partner countries. Simply stated, coming to Japan might be one way of overcoming such a cultural gap.

JICA, therefore, would like to invite as many leaders of partner countries as possible to come and visit us, to mingle with the Japanese people, and witness the advantages as well as the disadvantages of Japanese systems, so that integration of their findings might help them reach their developmental objectives.
